Reviews

Academic

[Yale] Small class sizes (12-14). Engaging faculty. Each department (Math, Sciences, Humanities, Language, etc) have AP opportunities. The faculty is extremely accessible—each day the school blocks offer an "extra help period." The work load is demanding and normally involves several hours of homework each night. No huge emphasis on exams.

College Counseling

[Yale] The process starts right away with the Counseling office alerting Freshman to not take academics lightly and to involve themselves in extracurricular activities that interest them. The College Counseling office does not assign you a counselor or have sit down one on one meetings until Junior year. The office is an active and approachable to all students. They show the students how to write college essays, contact schools, mail in applications, and hunt down letters of recommendation. The counselors have connections and inroads at numerous schools.

Admissions Process

[Yale] The Hun school goes from the sixth grade, although most students do not enter the school until high school. The best indicator for who is accepted is not the SSAT score but instead an involved and outgoing student who is interested in growing intellectually. It is easier to gain admission if a student agrees to board at Hun. The student should be sure to wear a shirt and tie to the interview as this is the dress code at Hun and the interviewer will surely be dressed as nicely. Things to stress in the interview would be involvement in activities, as well as appreciation for community and service.

Extra-Curricular Activities

[Yale] There are lots of extracurricular activities available at the Hun school ranging from the arts, theater, forensics, student clubs, and athletics. Each student is required to take place in a major activity in two of the three seasons (senior year only requires one). A major activity includes: playing a sport, managing a sport, taking part in a play, and in some instances forensics or a time consuming outside activity that is approved by the school. In addition there is a large student involvement in student organizations. The most obvious of these are Student Government, Key Club, Model UN, and Forensics, but there is also activist clubs, language clubs, faith based clubs etc. There is a forty-five minute activities period set aside each day to allow for group meetings, activities, or events. The sport teams are especially strong and tend to shape the experience of most Hun students in some way.

Quality of School Life

[Yale] The quality of life for a Hun student is exceptional. The facilities are unmatched in most areas. Housing is acceptable (desirable when compared with the computation), the athletic facilities have recently been renovated and are now the highest caliber, and the cafeteria serves great food in a great dining hall. The Princeton area is very safe. Boarding students take trips or have activities on the weekends. The schools socio-economic background (including the students, faculty, and neighborhood) is relatively well off. There is a significant portion of the student body on financial aid.
